1. Conditions in the prison in Wroclaw are bad. The number of prisoners amounted at the beginning to about 1,800; before the "referendum," however, it increased considerably, and in early summer up to 3,600 people were imprisoned, most of them members of AK. Cells built for 12 prisoners house up to 45 people. The prison guard consisted of Russians and Poles. They urged the prisoners to collaborate with the MVD and the Security Office. This was refused by the prisoners who were hostile to these institutions and and who did not trust them.
